NARROW-GAUGE RAILROADS.

W. W. Neviu, in the American Mangfacturers' Journal for January, sets forth mass of facts never before given to the public in regard to the narrow-gauge ulrouls. He snys:

The narrow-gauge idea is not a mere question of distance between the rails, as its popular name, taken from its most distinctive feature of change, to the unpofessional eye might seem to indicate. It is a reform movement in railway management and construction. It means retreachment and economy in the con-struction and operation of the iron road the modern highway. It means, to etchelly its prominent reform:

I. A saving in the first cost of con-traction, say about 33 per cent.

II. A saving in operation which shall make the not earnings average 50 per cent, of the gross instead of 33, which has so far been a literal average for good has so far been a re-completed roads.

III. The ability to reach sections of the country where it is physically im-possible for roads of the wide gauge to

The writer thus illustrates the advantages of the narrow-gange over the broad-

If one farmer, in carrying his wheat to market used a wagon which, empty, was almost as heavy as his neighbor's with simost as heavy as his neighbor's with the load on, whose wheat would cost the most? Whose horses and feed and drivers would cost him the most? Whose work would be done the quickest and in the most workmalike manner? Whose road would require most repairing? And, lastly, who would get into the market first? This is for the Grangers.

The number of miles of narrow-gauge ailroads built in the Canadas and British North America is 456. The tota make when completed will be 811. The writer of this interesting article closes as ollows: The narrow-gauge movement being a motion of recent times, the demonstration of its elaims has so far been confined to argument and calculation; now at length we have in some cases the re-results of the first year's work, and proceed to give briefly the demonstration of the fact, at taken from the recents of the ceed to give briefly the demonstration of fact, as taken from the reports of the year's work of such roads as we have been able to reach.

From the several reports we tabulate results as follows:

The Denver and Rio Grande, for the first fon months of 1873, shows a net traffic earnings of nearly 49 per cent. of the gross.

traffic earnings of 361/2 per cent. on the gross.
The Arkansas Central, for their short The Arkansas Central, for their short line of sixty-four miles completed, for the six months ending July, 1873, shows net earnings at the rate of $2,600 per mile per year, which is far more than the average of Southern railroads. The results of operations surely are a promise that amounts to evidence.

The results of construction, too, have been achieved, it must be steadily borne in mind, at a time when general railroad building had been severely checked; and building had been severely checked; and the running expenses are those not of completed, but of uncompleted roads in progress of active construction.

Cheaper roads, with cheaper operations, of course involve cheaper freights. In this respect the narrow-guage movement may be the solution of the threatening Grange question. The reduction of freight enlarges the farmers market. Again, by ascending grades and rounding curves, impossible to broad-guage engineering, the narrow-guage railways open up to development vast areas of our open up to development vast areas of our country which must otherwise remain forever closed.

The first division of the Denver and Rio Grande, with its equipment, cost $13,500 per mile, complete, while the Cauada roads are said to have averaged $15,000. Had we constructed our railways under this system, at an average cost of even $20,000 per mile, equipped, the account would have stood between the two systems as follows:

Sixty-seven thousand miles standard gauge (at $50,000 per mile.

Sixty-seven thousand miles narrow-gauge (at $20,000 per mile.

most? Whose horses and feed and drivers would cost him the most? Whose work would be done the quickest and in the most workmanlike manner? Whose road would require most repairing? And lastly, who would get into the market first? This is tor the Grangers.

The following table presents a list of those roads which have a portion of the line built and in operation, showing in the first column the mileage of track already in operation, and in the second the mileage involved in the completion of roads already in partial operation:

ardly be overestimated.

The past is the dead past, and need not be mourned; but the future is to be provided for with judgment. The same work must be done over again. Another 60,000 miles of railroad must be built. Shall we pay for it in millions or in billions? Shall the throw away or save a national debt?

It is probable that these laboriously collected statistics will surprise even the professional railway world.

The roads are all young; are laboring under all the disadvantages incident to the inception of organization; are scattered in different roats of the land, have tered in different parts of the laud: have no system of official intercommunication. In fact, the right hand of this movement in fact, the right hand of this movement literally does not know what its left hand is doing. But withal, the work is one of magnitude and promise, and far beyond the general conception. Even the technical railway journals having been giving official currency to paragraphs fixing the narrow-gauge of the United States and Canadas at 700 miles. Let us glance ence more in closing, at the totals of the above tables:

Nothing is here said of the number of organized narrow-gauge companies, because it is impossible to get at them accurately, and new ones are constantly coming to light. A private directory, compiled in collecting these statistics, shows 120, all with some evidence of work done either in the market or in the field. Nothing is here said of the number of
